How are you all doing? My name is Lucille Cindy Watahomigie and I was hired at the Hualapai Cultural Resource Department as the Hualapai Language Manager at the end of June, 2017. In December, 2016, the Hualapai Tribal Council approved some money to start a Hualapai Language Program.

The Hualapai language is on the verge of not being spoken in approximately 15 years since only a handful of the people under 40-50 years old are speaking the Hualapai language. And our goal is to reverse the language shift or to encourage the Hualapai language to be spoken in the homes and community again. This is in an effort for the Hualapai Language to still be spoken in 50 years.

My job will be to set up the Hualapai Language Program which will include:

- Community involvement and support and commitment in Strategic planning
- Vision and Mission Statement
- Goals and objectives
- Implementation-Activities to reverse the language shift
- Curriculum Development- topics and hands on materials
- Methods and strategies to teaching or talking in the language
- Recruiting Language speakers to talk to the language learners so they can acquire the language
- Teacher training
- Assessing Programs, resources, proficiency or fluency of the language
- Surveys – attitudes, number of speakers, where the language is spoken, etc
- Technology- social media

Most important of all is to start the Hualapai Language Gatherings for those eager to start speaking and maintaining the language. It takes 700 hours for a person to hear and speak the language to acquire or learn the language. In order to learn a sentence or phrase, say it and hear it 20 times. So, Nya diyu:je, let's produce some Hualapai Language speakers.

We will have our first Hualapai Language Gathering on Tuesday, August 8, 2017 at the Cultural Department at 4:00 pm. Bay mi va:mja.

Public Notice • Gate Valves on the Livestock Water Lines*Submitted by: Rachele Mahone | Hualapai Department of Natural ResourcesHUALAPAI DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES

April 24, 2017

PUBLIC NOTICEDO NOT tamper with gate valves on the livestock water lines out on the reservation!

Last week 4/17/17 through 4/21/17, HDNR was forced to haul water to districts to ensure that cattle had access to sufficient water while range water located the disruption in the main water line. The disruption was later found to have been a gate valve that had been tampered with which shut down service on the main water line. This caused significant delays in water deliveries, other scheduled projects, and the daily operations of the Hualapai Department of Natural Resources, Agriculture program.

If there is a need for water delivery or there are problems with leaking pipes or valves, please contact the Department of Natural Resources immediately. With your help, we can ensure that there are no service interruptions with water delivery to the livestock districts, tribal agencies, wildlife and community functions out on the reservation.

Should you have any questions or concerns please do not hesitate to contact the Hualapai Department of Natural Resources.

Our mission is to conserve, protect and enhance the natural resources of the Hualapai Reservation while providing for multiple consumptive and non-consumptive uses, and ensuring the overall goal of long-term sustainable and balanced multiple uses of natural resources under the direction of the Hualapai Tribal Council. We are committed to fostering a productive working relationship with all livestock districts and their producers. Should you have any questions or concerns please feel free to contact us.

Respectfully,
Hualapai Department of Natural Resources

Back Problems

It has been estimated that in the Britain alone thirty million working days are lost through backache. The worldwide figures for lost production must be staggering and yet nobody has come up with a solution to the problem of chronic back pain. Instead it is an inevitable result of our forefathers having got up from the all-fours position very many millennia ago. In other words, it's just something that you have to put up with.

One of the most exasperating aspects of back pain is that unless you are actually in spasm nobody can actually see you have a problem, and telling the boss you are in agony so can't come to work can be met with disbelief. On the other hand, when you tell someone that you have back pain they said invariably "Of I have that too" and proceed to launch into a monologue about how ghastly theirs is! Sometimes back pain is due to specific physical reasons such as a slipped disc, and for this remedies can be found. But more often than not it is just the pain of strain. Slouching over a keyboard for fifty-two weeks of the year leads to trouble, of lifting boxes the wrong way. Bad posture, digging the garden, and staggering with the shopping after a long day's work can all cause problems. Falls and whiplash can reappear as back pain years later, and a number of degenerative diseases cause back pain too.

But the spine is one of the most important parts of the body and needs special care. It does, after all, house the spinal cord which is actually a part of the brain. Serious back damage can cause paralysis and a whole range of other problems. One of the best preventative measures involves strengthening the stomach muscles so that compensatory action doesn't need to be taken by the muscles that support the back. This is especially important for those who have bad posture or bad muscle tone: lie on the floor with your arms crossed and slowly lift the upper half of your body, using only the upper and lower stomach muscles. Breathe as you lift up and in as you roll down. Start slowly and increase to twenty of these roll-ups per day. Not only will they improve your posture and strengthen your back, they will also help you to lose weight.

There are many types of back pain: lumbago, which affects the lower back; sciatica, which causes pain in the buttocks radiating out to the thighs and legs; fibrositis, tender bundles of fibrous tissues within the muscle; arthritis; spondylosis; curvature of the spine; slipped discs; and pains caused by weak back muscles, weak abdominal muscles, and tension.

Essential oils can provide wonderful relief from chronic back pain. They penetrate deeply into the muscle tissues, encouraging contracted muscles to expand, they increase blood flow to the area, and allow torn fibrous tissues to be repaired by the body. Use these essential oils in best advantage in blends; 5 drops per 1 teaspoon base oil:

Essential Oils to Treat Back Pain

- | | | | | | |
|---------------------|--------------------|--------------|------------|------------|-----------|
| - Thyme (all types) | - Chamomile (both) | - Cypress | - Rosemary | - Juniper | - Oregano |
| - Balsam de Peru | - Vetiver | - Peppermint | - Ginger | - Sage | - Basil |
| - Camphor | - Benzoin | - Eucalyptus | - Lavender | - Angelica | |

And here are three synergistic blend formulas that are very good for alleviating back pain:

Back Pain Synergistic Formulas

Formula 1

Rosemary 10 drops
Marjoram 10 drops
Sage 10 drops

Formula 2

Lavender 10 drops
Eucalyptus 10 drops
Ginger 10 drops

Formula 3

Peppermint 10 drops
Rosemary 10 drops
Basil 10 drops

*All diluted in 2 tablespoons vegetable oil.

Massage eases any type of backache. Get a friend to do it for you. If this is impossible, massaging the lower back yourself is relatively easy although you will find the upper back more difficult. But the oils can still be applied to the skin, where they will penetrate through to the tissues, by putting them on a sponge or cloth and attaching it to a back brush, or something similar. Ice-massage is a very effective method of treating lumbago, sciatica, and fibrositis. Typists and clerical workers are prone to develop these conditions, which are often caused by sitting in one position for too long. They usually affect the upper back muscles and cause and cause a chronic ache, often with the muscles going into spasm. Ice-massage is also very helpful on any area that feels inflamed. To prepare the ice you need several Styrofoam cups. Fill them with water and freeze, then cut the cup down so that the ice is protruding. Massage over the sore areas in circular movements.

Sinusitis

Use the following combination of oils in the steam inhalation method:

- Rosemary 3 drops - Thyme 1 drop - Peppermint 1 drop

Make a blend using the following proportions and put 1 drop on a tissue and inhale.

- Rosemary 2 drops - Geranium 1 drop - Eucalyptus 1 drop

Blend the oils below in the proportions. Use 5 drops only in each message. Massage around the neck, behind and in front of the ears, over the cheekbone, the nose, and forehead.

- Rosemary 5 drops - Geranium 5 drops - Eucalyptus 2 drops - Peppermint 3 drops

*Blend all together and use 5 drops per teaspoon vegetable oil.

Will global warming effects change Native American religious practices?

2017-07-08 | THE ENTERPRISE

The Colorado River, one of the longest rivers in the United States, is gradually shrinking. This is partly a result of overuse by municipalities and seasonal drought. The other reason is global warming. The decline in the river reservoir will have serious implications for large U.S. cities, such as Los Angeles, that depend on the Colorado River as their water source. In addition, this will also have an impact on the Native American tribes who view the Colorado River as sacred to their religions.

As Ka-Voka Jackson, a member of the Hualapai tribe and a graduate student working to address climate change on the Colorado River and restoring native plant species along its banks, stated, "The Colorado River is so sacred not just to my tribe, but to so many others." As a scholar of Native American religions and the environment, I understand how indigenous people's religions and sacred places are closely tied to their landscape. For the past 100 years, indigenous peoples have been forced to adapt to changes in their environments and modify their religious rituals in the United States. The U.S. government made certain Native American religious practices illegal in the 19th and early 20th century. Although these policies have since been rescinded, they led to changes in many indigenous practices.

Global warming, however, is different. The question is whether indigenous people will be able to adapt their beliefs all over again due to the impact of global warming on the natural world.

Adapting to change

The Blackfeet tribe in Montana brought changes in their relationship with the natural world as a result of the policies of the U.S. government from the 1880s to the 1930s.

For example, the Blackfeet purposefully moved religious ceremonies from one time on their liturgical calendar to completely different times to avoid the U.S. government penalizing native people for dancing or participating in religious ceremonies. The Blackfeet moved their annual O'kan, or sundance festival, from late summer (usually held at the end of August) to the Fourth of July celebration. They avoided U.S. government punishment by masking their ceremonies within state-sanctioned public events.

Policies related to the mining of natural resources and damming of rivers on indigenous lands have also led to changes in Native Americans' religious practices. Historian David R. M. Beck interviewed elders and researched how the Menominee tribe in Wisconsin adapted to the loss of their sacred fish, the sturgeon, after a paper mill built a dam across the Wolf River.

The sturgeon disappeared after the dam was built in 1892, because they could no longer swim upstream to spawn. For over 100 years, the Menominee tribal members continued to pray and conduct their annual "returning of the sturgeon" ceremony in the spring - even though there were no more sturgeon in the river. The Menominee ultimately won the right to return the sturgeon to the Wolf River in 1992 and the tribe revitalized the full ceremony and celebration of their sacred fish. In all these situations, Native American tribes learned to adapt to the challenges placed before them, modify their religious practice and embrace a different relationship with the natural world.

Global warming, religion

When it comes to global climate change, it affects everyone, not just specific groups in specific places. But for many indigenous peoples, natural resources are closely linked to religious beliefs and practices. Historically, indigenous peoples used the natural seasonal cycles of weather, plants and animals as part of their liturgical or religious calendar. The Blackfeet held their annual "beaver bundle ceremony" in the early spring as ice melted off rivers and beavers returned to the open waters. In Blackfeet mythology, a beaver served as a deity who taught humans how to cultivate tobacco, which the tribe used for important religious ceremonies and as a peace offering to their enemies.

There are signs, though, that beavers are now moving north due to global warming. Biologists are currently studying both beavers and the birch and alder shrubs that beavers eat, as both move north into new regions. Scientists worry that as a keystone species, the movement of beavers will change the northern ecosystems as they cut off waterways and build beaver dams. And shrubs will change the local water ways that they grow by. This will affect local animal species. What will happen when there are no more beaver in Blackfeet territory? Will their religious traditions adapt similar to the Menominee when they faced the loss of their sacred sturgeon?

Religion and resiliency

From the arctic tundra to the American desert southwest, and places worldwide, indigenous peoples will be facing the impact of global climate change. Regarding the shrinking of the Colorado River, researchers Brad Udall and Jonathan Overpeck have concluded that, "Failing to act on climate change means accepting the very high risk that the Colorado River basin will continue to dry up into the future."
