EAGLE EYES

August 29, 2019

Mohave County Fair

Once again our school will be submitting student entries into the Mohave County Fair. Mr. Byrne has agreed to be the point of contact for our school.

Entries are due to Mr. Byrne on or before September 5.

We have arranged for our entire school to take a tour of the County Fair on Thursday, September 12, 2019. Morning routes will operate as usual. At 8:05 am, we will load the buses and head to Kingman.

We expect to be at the Fairgrounds for approximately 2 hours, returning to school by 11:15.

That day is a minimum attendance day, and all students are released at noon to accommodate our Student/Family/Teacher Conferences.

Permission slips for the field trip and the schedule for conferences will go out next week.

Open House

Thank you to everyone who attended our Open House last night. For those who did not, the Family Handbook and Signature page will be going home today. Please sign and have your student return the signature page next Tuesday, September 3rd.

NEW BUS

Our new school bus, Bus 5, is officially ready to hit the road. You will be seeing it in service sometime in the next 2 weeks.

WE'RE ALWAYS COLLECTING

HOW CAN I HELP MY STUDENT?

- In a crisis, take care of yourself first – If you've ever been on a commercial flight, the flight attendant always tells passengers in the safety briefing to attend to their own oxygen mask first, before trying to help others. The same is true when your student is dealing with a child in meltdown mode. Often the situations that our students are facing are the same situations that we face as adults. But we can't help them restore calm in their lives, unless we take care of those emotions first for ourselves. Pause. Breathe. And only then, take action. Your students seeing you maintain calm and composure can help them do the same.

- Be careful with your words – Oftentimes the frustrations of everyday life can lead us to say things that are not productive in helping students grow into positive successful adults. Things like:

"Because I said so, that's why!"

"Stop that crying right this instant!"

"Not another word! Do you understand me?"

For many of us, those phrases come out because that was what we heard as children. In order to break that cycle, we need to look at what our parents did well, what we wish they had done differently, and how those things have influenced us as parents. Only then can we begin to create a new framework for our own families.

- Have high expectations – By now, all students should be able to access StudentVUE to see their grades. What kind of student do you expect yours to be? Communicate those expectations. If you expect them to be passing all their classes, talk to them about why they are or are not, and what they can do to improve. Verify their grades at least weekly, so they know you are checking on what your expectations are. Mr. Wilson would like to remind 6th-8th grade families to ask to see communication binders at least weekly.

Oracle woman sells rare dolls to Hualapai Tribe

By John Hernandez | Posted February 8th, 2017

"I am submitting this email link for a story that was previously published via copperarea.com." "...just as a bit of history to share about the old doll factory."

<http://www.copperarea.com/pages/oracle-woman-sells-rare-dolls-hualapai-tribe/>

Evaline Auerbach with one of the Hualapai dolls she has spent years collecting.

These dolls will soon be heading to their new home back with the Hualapai Tribe.

Evaline Auerbach, resident of Oracle since 1976, downsizing in preparation for a move, says that she is trying to get everything to "where it belongs" as much as possible. In that regard, she has sold her collection of Hualapai Dolls to the Tribe, based in Peach Springs, AZ.

The cloth dolls all have similar faces, with stitched-in eyes and mouth and with bodies made in the original "Suzy Belle" style. The "Suzy Belle" dolls were hand made in the early 1970s at the Hualapai Tribal Factory in Peach Springs, Arizona. The dolls, which are collectible items to-day, initially sold for about $18.

Seamstress Annie Chase created the original pattern in the 1860s when she made these dolls as gifts. Ms. Chase's pattern was passed down to her granddaughter, Ruth Underwood, who improved the pattern, developed a fabrication process, and opened a factory with her husband to manufacture "Suzy Belle Dolls." The factory employed about 20 Hualapai tribal members who produced an average of 59 dolls each day. Funding from the Bureau of Indian Affairs helped support operations.

These dolls will soon be heading to their new home back with the Hualapai Tribe.

Following a dispute with the Underwoods, the Hualapai Indian Tribe began manufacturing the "Hualapai Indian Doll" which was similar to the "Suzy Belle" doll but wore more traditional styles of clothing and had more Native features that included dark hair and the incorporation of feathers and headbands. The Underwoods relocated to Colorado where they continued to make their original dolls as well as adding African American and Caucasian themed variations. Manufacturing ceased later in the 1970s.

Subsequently at least two Hualapai women are known to have handmade replicas, mostly female with long skirts. The factory dolls were male and female and wore mostly "calico" dress, the girls with shorter skirts. One of the subsequent makers, created three of the dolls that Auerbach is selling to the tribe. Auerbach bought those three dolls from the Museum in Kingman but, after the first one she bought, she got the others mostly on eBay. The sellers there had them listed as "Native American Cloth dolls" until she told one or two where they really came from.

Auerbach bought her first doll at the gift shop in the Inn at Peach Springs where she was staying during an Elderhostel program that also visited the Colorado River down the road from there and went to the Grand Canyon West area where the tribe has not constructed the glass extension over the Canyon. Later, when she went back to walk out over the Grand Canyon, she took along some of the dolls, which were a big hit with the people who worked there. Even some of the young people recognized them.

The Tribe agreed to buy all her 36 dolls for the lump sum of $1,500. They were picked up by Addie Crozier, Assistant Secretary of the Hualapai tribe. The tribe will place some of the dolls in the Tribal Administration Building in front of the Hualapai Tribal Council Chambers and some will go to the Cultural Department in Peach Springs and the Grand Canyon West Cultural Center.
